JUNE DAYS

The week beginning June 18th contains many historic and eventful days. This year summer begins on the 21st.

Summer will continue for three months, until September 23rd, when autumn will begin.

The 21st is also remembered as the day, back in 1788, when New Hampshire, the ninth state to ratify the Constitution of the United States, did so and officially established the Constitution as valid.

On the 22nd, in 1908, Grover Cleveland died, and on that day in 1874, Dr. Andrew Taylor Still, a Kansas physician, decided that the cause of disease could sometimes be found "in the limited or excited action of the nerves which control the fluids of part or the whole of the body." That was the beginning of osteopathy.

June 23rd is the birthday of William Penn, and is supposed to be the anniversary of his treaty with the Indians, which is assumed to have taken place in 1693. Cabot discovered North America, on June 24th, 1497, and it also the anniversary of the Feast of St. John the Baptist. On the 25th of June, in 1876, General George A. Custer was massacred at Little Big Horn, and his force of 278 men were wiped out. On June 26th, and some readers will remember this, the first U. S. troops landed in France, in 1917.

In the early part of next week another memorable June day falls on the 27th, when the British Navy attacked Charleston in 1776. This day is also he birthday anniversary of Helen Keller, probably the most notable blind deaf-mute in the history of education. She was born a normal child at Tuscumbia, Alabama, and on her father's side she was connected with the Lees of Virginia, and on her mother's side with the Adamses and Everetts, of Massachusetts.

When she was nineteen months old she had scarlet fever, which left her without the sense of sight or hearing, and consequently made her unable to learn to talk. She, of course, went on to become a brilliant student, lecturer, and was an inspiration to all those who found themselves handicapped as she was.

WHAT ABOUT COLLEGE?

Schools are closing all over the nation and numbers of young people will go into the business world in the hope of making money. Too many of them will stop their scholastic training at the end of high school days without realizing the tremendous advantages that will come to them by pursuing their way through college.

The Times-Virginian does not recommended college course for every graduate of a high school. There was a time when some people thought this would be a good idea. There is a growing belief that some boys and girls are limited in their ability to take advanced education. Such people might as well go to work at the best employment obtainable. But, those who have the ability to "take a higher education" should press on as far as possible, confident that it will pay great rewards.

GERMANY ENDS TAXES

West Germany recently took action to eliminate unemployment taxes. In short, the government moved to cancel out taxes which have been collected on peoples' salaries —which went to provide funds for the unemployed.

In the United States we have similar taxes, levied against employers and employees, and supplemented by the government in some cases, which are supposed to take care of unemployed persons. The system varies from state to state.

The United States is the richest country in the world and yet we have four or five million unemployed people, and have had them for several years now. The money we hand out to these people runs into large figures and means more taxes must be diverted to this end.

But, in Germany — a country which was utterly devastated just a few years back — there is such prosperity that the fund for this purpose has grown so large there is no longer a need for taxes to add to it!

What a marvelous record of achievement for the anti-communist and democratic government of Western Germany! The record of progress made by West Germany as a democracy, as compared to that of East Germany, a communist country, is the world's best example of the comparative merits of the two systems.

But we in the United States, the richest of all countries, should take a lesson from this accomplishment. The value of prosperity is not just that we have a budget in black, not just that we have people making money and living well. The value of prosperity in today's economic war with international communism is much greater. We must have prosperity that will assure the stability of the dollar, an all-important test in the great struggle between free enterprise and communism.

Prosperity is not something just nice to experience. It is a life and blood necessity. Inflation will rip the floor from under us.
